It is understood that the packers will charge that their case was decided wholly on presumption and without evidence. While the State Department has reached no conclusion in the meat cases, it is known that some officials feel that the point raised by the packers is well taken. Officials have gained the impres-sion that the court decided against the packers solely on the ground that the presumption was against them in view of the extraordinary volume of the meat shipments to Denmark and the organization of German resources for the war.

Just what action, if any, the United tates Government might take in the nackers' behalf has not yet ben madee clear. It is understood that the packers have already taken an appeal from the prize court's decision, but this step, it is held here, will not prejudice their standing in the event of other measures being adopted later. Government cannot accept on behalf of the ground that the accepted rules of international law were not applied by the court. Many here are inclined to hold the view that the British court has proved in this case that it is not truly an international tribunal applying international law, but merely a court for the application of British municipal law,
